Reminiscences of the Glasgow Chess League

By P.B. Anderson

It is with great pleasure that I accede to the request to look back on my forty years association with the Glasgow Chess League, an association that led to many friendships for me, most of them, alas, terminated by the passing of those who are no longer with us. Let me try to give a picture of what chess life was like in Glasgow forty years ago.

The outstanding feature of chess life then was the extraordinary amount of chess that was played in the afternoon. Membership of the clubs in those days was largely composed of the professional and business sides of the community, and, looking back, I wonder how the business life of the city survived. It makes my mouth water to think of what chess was like then.

By far the most active club then was the Bohemians, with a membership of close on 300 when I joined in 1928. They met six days a week, from eleven in the morning till eleven at night, and latterly seven days a week. The membership was cosmopolitan, and I was told that shortly before I joined a dinner was held, at which Auld Lang Syne was given in twenty different languages. It may be of some interest to tell that Bonar Law and his brother J.R.K. Law were among the members. Others I remember with joy are Norrie Singh, Bert Weetch, Alfie Jonas, Tom Ballard, John Patterson, James Borthwick (who loved to have his M.A. printed after his name) and F. G. Harris. The numbers are so great that I must omit almost all of them, for this is not a catalogue.

But I cannot leave the Bohemians without giving a glimpse of the atmosphere which prevailed then.

Among the large membership of those days, there were many kibitzers. To give those who desired a quiet game, free from interference, the kibitzers had a board all to themselves called the "Tipping Table", where it was legitimate for all and sundry to offer suggestions — it was not unusual for the tipsters to lift the pieces off the board, for example. One Saturday evening the players were becoming heated because there was so much interference, Ex-Bailie Shaw Maxwell, a great old chap with a very pawky sense of humour, poured oil on the troubled waters by remarking to the actual players: "You know, gentlemen, that at this board the players are not allowed to interfere in the game!"

The Polytechnic met six days a week in John Anderson's Royal Polytechnic (now rebuilt as Lewis's) in Argyle Street, in the sumptuous coffee room. Since Anderson's closed at 7 o'clock in the evening, Poly had to play their matches in the League on Saturday afternoons. The Central met six days a week in the Regent Tea Rooms now part of the Whitehall Restuarant. They however, had two late nights a week. Willie Gibson, a lawyer from Wigtownshire, married Miss Buick, of the Restuarants, and was to be found every week-day afternoon presiding over a coterie of players in the tea room in West George Street, and playing all-comers. Willie was, along with James McKee, the strongest Scottish player of his time. Both were members of the Glasgow Club which somehow remained aloof in its aerie in the Athenaeum in St. George's Place now a part of the Academy of Music.

The strongest Clubs in the League in those days were the Glasgow, Central, Queen's Park (who met in the B.B. Cinerama at Eglington Toll) and Glasgow Jewish, who met in a room in Bridge Street. Another club coming on then was Pollok Street Church, just off Paisley Road, who, a few years later had H.A. Hunham as top board, a shipwright from Tyneside, who was British Championship class. Other clubs I recall from this period were Singer, Bearsden, Motherwell (quite a force in the League) and Cambuslang.

For the salient memory of the League I jump ten years, to the advent of Max Pav-ey, the most distinguished chess-player I have been privileged to call friend. Max was here a bare nine months, but I believe he is entitled to be called the strongest who ever played in the League. Max came here in the Autumn of 1938 to study medicine at St. Mungo's College, and was the most brilliant student of his year. He moved into digs in Partick, and some connection of his landlady's told him there was a chess club in the Working Men's Institute in Bridgeton. He made his way there at once, and remained faithful to them throughout his stay, being, of course a tower of strength to them. Incidentally he found time to win what may well be called the strongest Scottish Championship ever held. We remained friends till his untimely death. He only visited Glasgow once again - on the return journey from the USSR - USA match in Moscow. I have a souvenir of this match from him - a postcard with the autographs of all the players in the Russian team.

It may well be that when I joined the Bohemians I was the first boy ever to join a League club. Apparently there was some opposition in the committee to my playing in the League, but play I did, my first match being against Bearsden at board 7 in the second team. My opponent was no less a personage than Willie Higgins the then Secretary of the League. I won, and so, I suppose opposition was silenced. I gradually rose in the team, and I remember that in my first game at top board for the second, against Mr. Small of the Poly, the opening was a quadruple fianchetto, an indication that the influence of the Reti-Capablanca game at New York in 1924 had permeated minor League chess. It was then but a step to board 7 in the first team. I remember one of these games in this position against Poly. My opponent was an old gentleman called Whyte, who moved very slowly. I sat impatiently waiting for him to move, when he leaned over and said: "Your flag has fallen". It had. However, I chanced to look at his clock, and found that his flag was down too. He had used all his own time, and some of mine as well! The result was agreed a draw. I stayed in the lower regions of the team for quite a time, even after I had won the Club Championship. In those days age had precedence. I suppose it was quite unthinkable that a teenager could be a better player than a greybeard. Curiously, though perhaps I envied a higher place, I was happy to play in such a distinguished company. After all, I was the youngest of any player in the League.

Unfortunately all my games from this period were lost during the war while I was with the Air Force. The following game, played twenty-two years ago illustrates my style of chess. I have always enjoyed League Chess; the faster pace suits me.

From the Glasgow League 1946.

Today a revolution has taken place - the greybeards are gone. Youth is first, last and everywhere. Sixteen or seventeen years ago

I was asked to help in the formation of the Cathcart Club. The founder members were all ripe in years. Now Cathcart, one of the largest clubs in the League, has only four members over the age of 30. Where are the veterans? Where are all the leisure business and professional men of forty years ago? Perhaps they have been submerged by the changed tempo of present-day life whereby the boss has to be at his desk from nine till five?

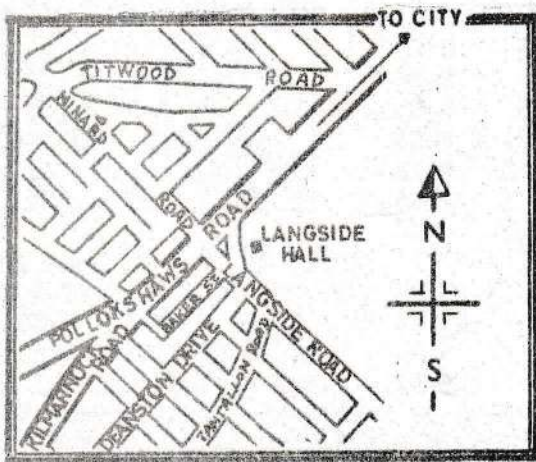

The growth of modern habits like dining out and watching 'telly' may be factors as well. The poet says somewhere that 'Crabbed age and Youth' do not mix. Possibly the influx of younger people makes the club atmosphere uncongenial to the older and more staid man.

On a future occasion perhaps we may examine this problem more critically as well as looking at some of the League personalities of the last 40 years.

For the benefit of those people who obtain utterly hopeless positions at this Congress I am recounting an anecdote showing one way of getting out of a completely lost game. Many years ago we had in the Bohemian Chess Club an Italian musician called Veneri, who was an expert conjuror. One night he had a completely lost game, and his opponent was complaining fretfully that Veneri should resign. "I am not so sure that I lose the game" said Veneri. With that he put his King in his mouth and went through all the motions of swallowing. Certain it is, that the King had gone, and how can you claim a win against an opponent who has the King in his inside? Can such a King be mated?

A look at the past

By Gerald Bonner

It may just have slipped the reader's memory that September 21st, 1962, was a Friday and was the start of Glasgow's annual autumn holiday week-end. Some of the citizens take this last opportunity for a few days away from the city before the onset of winter. Most of them were, however, engaged in one of its many native cultures: "called to the bar", "heads down for a full house" or at the "pictures", the "jigging", or simply at home with "Coronation Street." On that evening some of the citizens, between forty and fifty to be more exact, were in the smoke-filled atmosphere of the James Bridie Memorial Library of Glasgow University Union. Not that this room is usually smoke-filled, nor that the occupants were catching up on their reading. No, both factors are explained by the fact that they were participating in the first Glasgow League Chess Congress. The players, myself among them were going to sit and ruin our nerves, and possibly also our lungs, in four-hour bouts of combat on the Friday evening, twice on the Saturday, and twice on the Monday. And I have no doubt some were asking themselves as the evening drew near to its close, why they were not engaged in the more usual activities already listed.

Picture the scene: the room in a deathly hush except for the insistent ticking of those "two-timing" devices known as chess clocks; rings of faces forming a hazy background to the remaining games, here and there players about to explode into a flurry of arms and chessmen, as in that game up at the top of the room. White has four minutes left to Black's two minutes, with only 30 moves played, no exceptional feat if they had only to reach 40 moves. However, with the time control at the 60th move, both players are wondering why they came in the first place. (As it happened only 7 more moves were played when White resigned owing to an impending mate.)

I think this is a fair idea of that first congress session. Things have changed considerably since that day - the time limit is now "only" 45 moves in two hours! but Glasgow chessplayers owe a great debt of gratitude to the player who organised it, Mr. William Bryden of Hillhead F.P. Chess Club. The idea of such a congress was entirely Bill's and it was through his energy and enthusiasm that it became established.

This first year had two tournaments each of 5 rounds with no play on Sunday, and I was lucky enough, and proud, to emerge as the first Glasgow League Individual Champion. Mr. W. A. Fairhurst, President of the Scottish Chess Association, presented the prizes with praise for the new venture and tribute to Mr. Bryden and the small committee which helped with the organisation. The competitors found it was quite a good way to spend a holiday week-end and went away looking forward to the next year.

The Second Congress was held in the Student's Union of the Royal College of Science and Technology (now the University of Strathclyde) and attracted an entry of 60. There was again 5 rounds (two on Saturday, one on Sunday, and two on Monday) and J.D. Wheeler and myself tied for first place with 4 points. The tie was to be broken by the sum of opponent's scores and we waited on the results of games still in progress to decide the Champion. In the crucial game, "my" player swindled a stalemate from "his" player, and I retained the Championship by that half-point on the tie-breaking system. (This incident may serve to confirm the suspicions some readers may harbour about a certain player being born with a silver spoon in his mouth). The well-known Glasgow journalist Jack House, presented the prizes with some witty comments.

It was obvious by now that the congress fulfilled a long-felt want in Glasgow, and Bill Bryden and his committee set about enlarging its scope by the introduction of several junior events.

The Third Congress was due to take place again at Glasgow University Union but this arrangement had to be cancelled near the time of the congress and a last minute venue was found thanks to the generous co-operation of Glasgow Ladies' Chess Club. Their club room at Green's Playhouse Cinema was made available for the week-end, with 5 rounds exactly as in the first congress. This Third Congress had four tournaments for juniors, and one of these marked a new development in the Scottish Chess scene. Prior to this year (1964) only one Chess tournament had ever been held in Scotland solely for girls (in Dundee, organised by Mrs. Elder). The Congress established the Glasgow Girls' Championship which became the first annual girls' event in Scotland and encouraged chess among girls in other cities. (There is now an annual Scottish Girls' Championship, and girls in the major cities have at least three events annually available for them). Eight girls participated in this inaugural event, all of them from Bellarmine Secondary School, and if some lacked a polished chess style they made up for it in enthusiasm and determination. One dour struggle lasted all of 120 moves with the youngest competitor keeping a beautifully neat score throughout the game as she doggedly beat down her opponent through numerous missed mates on both sides.

A new record for any Scottish Congress was set up by this 3rd Congress which drew just over one hundred entrants. This number stretched the accommodation to its limits. The room used by the Ladies' Club is probably large enough to seat that number of players in reasonable comfort, but it has many pillars awkwardly placed and part of the floor partitioned off by a permanent railing. It also has a beautiful large fireplace which in the winter gives the ladies the comfort of a huge coal fire which must be the envy of many a club. Fortunately, there was no fire during that week-end, otherwise the players seated in very close proximity to the to the fireplace would have provided a delicacy on some cannibal menu (roasted chessnuts perhaps). The room also has a table designed, I should think, for the banqueting hall of some castle. This table is huge and it could not be used for any of the games (there being, that year, a dearth of players with arms six feet in length). This "controller's" table gave the organisers more space than any two dozen of the seated players put together, and this was perhaps a blessing since they must have spent some considerable part of their week-end hopping onto the table to make passage for itinerant players seeking the haven of their seat. One newspaper photograph of the scene gives the impression that any player making a relatively fast hand movement would be likely to execute captures on the boards to either side of him as well as on his own.

The conditions made spectating difficult but the games were nobly supported for much of the time by a group of seven or eight of my pupils, much to the consternation of my opponents who were entitled to be somewhat taken aback at the prospect of imminent death by suffocation.

Despite this ruse, W. Ballantyne of Griffin Chess Club emerged as victor in our last round game and, having energetically laid about him in the previous rounds, became the Glasgow League Champion.

Not long after this congress Mr. Bryden had a serious car accident resulting in a long period in hospital, with, I'm pleased to record, a complete recovery. The committee asked me to become its chairman and it was enlarged to cope with the increasing growth of the congress. The various members of the committee since that time have put in a tremendous amount of work for each congress.

The Fourth Congress brought us to the Glasgow Police Training School thanks to the generosity of the City of Glasgow Police and the unbounded energy of the Police Chess Club, a relative newcomer to the League, which has contributed a very great deal to chess organisation in Glasgow. Our association with the Training School lasted three happy years, in which we received every possible help from the staff. It is an excellent venue for any congress with its beautiful large hall and upper rooms. The Fourth Congress (1965) attracted more than 140 competitors, and the tender years of some of them was pleasing to the Assistant Chief Constable of Glasgow, Mr. William Ratcliffe, who performed the opening ceremony on Saturday morning. For the first time the events were of six rounds (two each on Saturday, Sunday and Monday) and this has been the pattern ever since except for extra rounds for some of the juniors. It was a great success and thoroughly enjoyed by all involved, and the prizes were becoming better with further trophies being donated for events year by year. On this occasion the Championship was won in good style by former Scottish Champion M. Fallone. The Congress was honoured to have the "Brain of Britain, 1965", S.T.V. Sports Commentator Bob Crampsey, to present the prizes.

The Fifth Congress made a great stride forward by changing the top event to the Glasgow Open Championship (incorporating the Glasgow League Championship) and inviting well-known players to participate. Among those who accepted were two English internationalists and strong British Championship contenders, N. Littlewood and C.M. Hindle. The total entry increased again to more than 160, as did the number of events. Baillie David Miller, the City's Senior Magistrate, opened the congress, and the Chief Constable, Mr. (now Sir) James Robertson, C.B.E. also spoke with warmth about the youthfulness of many of the competitors. The exuberance of youth has led to occasional misdemeanors, and to a noisy analysis room where Mr. & Mrs. B.H. Wood have valiantly provided the service of a bookstall to the accompaniment of the top of the pops and of some skittles chess which owed more to skittles than to chess.

However, our young chessplayers have generally set high standards of behaviour and are a real credit to Glasgow. The prize-giving ceremony brought a large crowd of adults on this occasion to hear Mr. Jock Stein, Manager of Celtic F.C. and Football Manager of the Year, but owing to an unfortunate mix-up of commitments he was unable to present the prizes, and Mr. Fitzjames, President of the Chess League, deputised for him. Norman Littlewood won the Open Championship, with the Glasgow League Championship being shared by D.B.A. Hunter and C.W. Pritchett.

The pattern for these years continued in the Sixth Congress. Yet another increase in entry brought the number of players up to 189, with no less than 10 different events. Again the Senior Magistrate Baillie William Hutcheson, opened the week-end, and again youth was to the fore. It is worth recording that the under-13 Championship (the second youngest age group in the Congress) produced the best chess of all the junior events. The Open Championship went to R.D. Keene one of Britain's strongest players and the League title again resulted in a tie between D.N.L. Levy, (Glasgow University C.C.) and C.W. Pritchett, (Polytechnic C.C.). Mr. Gair Henderson, the Sports Editor of the "Glasgow Evening Times" presented the prizes at a ceremony which was delayed by alarms and excursions (as the poet might put it) over the location of the prizes.

I have been honoured to be a member of all the committees formed to organise the congress right from that first one in 1962. It has had a remarkable growth from its infancy to its present sturdy childhood; and it is now providing an opportunity for Glasgow players to obtain first-class tournament chess. The quality of our juniors is improving rapidly and the Congress is helping to provide the soil which we hope will one day produce master players. Our move from the Police Training School is with a view to further increase in the number of participants. The venue for the Seventh Congress is the truly magnificent Langside

Halls and we are indebted to Glasgow Corporation for the use of them. I could sing paeans of praise to the present congress committee for their unstinting effort and preparation. But I leave that task to the competitors, if they go away happy with the results of these efforts over this week-end.
